

David Sudlow

Creative Design Manager

David joined Nick Bell Design in November 2007 as a lead graphic designer and is now creative design manager for the studio, overseeing and leading exhibition graphic design, environmental design and wayfinding projects.

David is involved in projects from conception through to completion, working with clients to define scope and content as well as with contractors on details and finishing. He is one of our main client contacts and manages both creative output and project programming.

Prior to Nick Bell Design, David spent three years working for the London studio of established museum designers Ralph Appelbaum Associates. During that time he worked on nationally recognised projects including London Transport Museum and the Culloden Battlefield Memorial visitor centre.

David has an MA in Communication Art & Design from the Royal College of Art, gaining a distinction for his written thesis 'Communication Origination'. Upon graduating from the RCA, in 2004, David was invited to become an Associate Lecturer in graphic design at the London College of Communication (LCC), a position he held for three years. He has also lectured and held design workshops at the University of Applied Arts in Vienna and in 2009 he was invited to give the keynote address at the London College of Communication School of Graphic Design graduation ceremony.

Born in London in 1980, David lives with his wife their daughter in north west London. His passions include French films of the 1960s, hill walking, and Test Match Special.
